Supply chain

The Independent receives services from third party suppliers of:

- editorial content, such as freelancers and picture agencies
- digital infrastructure, such as website hosting and maintenance companies
- other business services

Supply chain risks

The Independent has assessed the overall risk of contracting with organisations that engage in slavery or human trafficking as low.

Managing risks

The Independent undertakes the following activities to assess and address risks:

- Identify suppliers that are most likely to manufacture goods or provide services in countries and/or sectors where modern forms of slavery are more likely to be prevalent
- Consult with those suppliers identified and require them to certify their compliance with the MSA
- Review supply agreements and identify ways these can be strengthened to further reduce the risk of slavery and human trafficking
- Encourage best practices around due diligence when selecting new suppliers

Whistleblowing

The Independent encourages all its workers, customers and other business partners to report any concerns they may have in relation to the activities of its suppliers or within the organisation. This includes any circumstances that may give rise to an enhanced risk of slavery or human trafficking.
